Naming convention: isc vs community for ObjectScript package names

Hi Devs!

A few months ago I raised a discussion on the naming convention for ZPM modules.

And you free to put your name or your organization name for the packages you want to have your personal or company's brand.

But if you contribute to community, we suggested to have "community." package for all such libraries.

But the name is too long.

What if we use "isc." instead? Which can be read as "isc ->InterSystemsCommunity". Short and unique.

What do you think?
